Olympic torch hits Utah

Grecian flame nears Salt Lake

By Elise Christenson and Marianne Jensen

On Nov. 19, 2001, the Olympic torch began its journey from Olympia, Greece, linking today's world to the ancient world where the Olympics began.

The torch, after traveling more than 13,500 miles by foot, plane, train, ship, dog sled, horse-drawn sleigh and snowmobile, will arrive in Utah today.

"I'm overwhelmed. It brings tears to my eyes. I never imagined I'd have the opportunity to live in a city that the Olympics are held and get to carry the torch," said Colonel Donald Andrews, a torchbearer from Provo.

Ancient Roman citizens believed a burning torch would bring victory during war and prosperity to the empire — as long as it continued to burn.

"Sacred torches were not uncommon in the old world," said Eric Huntsman, assistant professor of classics and ancient history.

In 1934, Carl Diem invented the modern Olympic Torch Relay and the International Olympic Committee implemented it as part of the Games.

Today the torch's symbolism can mean something different to everyone.

"Modern people likely created new symbolism through a culmination of a number of myths," Huntsman said.

Heather Sandberg, 21, a junior from Provo majoring in elementary education, was chosen to carry the flame for her service with BYUSA and for working with students with disabilities.

"The torch represents something that unites all humankind. It burns within each of us, but it symbolizes the individual coming together with the whole world," she said.

When the Olympics began in 776 B.C., Greece was divided into individual city-states. The Olympic Games celebrated Pan-Hellenism, the idea that Grecians shared more in common than they thought, Huntsman said.

"Festivals, like the Olympics, made them come together and consider themselves Greek," he said.

Andrews, retired head of the BYU ROTC department, was chosen to carry the flame because of a distinguished career in the military. He will be running the torch north from 300 North and 600 East for two blocks.

"The torch symbolizes the Olympic ideal of peace, and laying down arms to come together," he said.

The ancient Greeks sent runners, known as Heralds of Peace, to call for a sacred truce before the Olympics began. Warring states stopped fighting so Grecians could travel to Olympia in peace, Huntsman said.

Kevin Scholz, a part-time BYU visual arts professor, was chosen to carry the torch for his service to Utah's veterans. He will relay the flame from Frontier Pies to Red Lobster.

"The torch represents the highest in human aspiration, and the purity of human beings striving to be the best they can be," he said.

According to the Web site of the Foundation for the Hellenic World, a non-profit cultural institution that studies Hellenic history, ancient Greek athletes were not only celebrated for athletic achievements, but also for moral strength. Success was attributed to an athlete's favor with the gods.

"Ancient victors were honored. The cities wouldn't feel the need for a city wall because they had an Olympic victor," Huntsman said.

Arthur Welch, a torchbearer from Mapleton, Utah County, was nominated to carry the torch because of his lifelong dedication to education. He will relay the flame from 900 East and Center Street up to the Peaks Arena.

"The torch symbolizes the humanity and the relationship with one another, and the opportunity to light the way for our fellow man," Welch said.

Pats pull off Super shocker

Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — A thrilling finish. A huge upset. Indeed, America got a Super Bowl that was worth all the fuss.

The outside of the Superdome looked more like a military compound than a football stadium Sunday, complete with soldiers on the ground and sharpshooters on the roof.

But the real action came inside, where Adam Vinatieri kicked a 48-yard field goal with no time left to lift the New England Patriots to a heart stopping 20-17 victory over the St. Louis Rams.

The most secure NFL title game ever was also an old-fashioned thriller that lived up to the hype — a shocking upset, a true testament to why football is the country's favorite sport.

And of course, with a game awash in flag waving, nobody could overlook the nickname of the winner — the Patriots, a 14-point underdog who went 5-11 in 2000 and weren't picked to do much better this season.

"We're all Patriots, and tonight, the Patriots are world champions," New England owner Robert Kraft said.

Vinatieri's game-winner will look great on his resume, above even the 45-yarder he kicked in the snow to send New England's first playoff game into overtime.

"He's been dependable and he's been our clutch guy all year," Patriots coach Bill Belichick said.

The game-winner was set up by a 53-yard drive engineered over the final 1:21 without any timeouts by Tom Brady — the quarterback who came from nowhere to replace superstar Drew Bledsoe.

"I knew they would give me the chance because we have a ton of champions," Vinatieri said. "I've never been so proud to be a member of anything in my life. We shocked the world, but we didn't shock ourselves."

The Patriots became the biggest underdog to win since Joe Namath and the New York Jets, 18-point underdogs against the Baltimore Colts, won 16-7 in 1969.

The Pats finally put their name on the Vince Lombardi Trophy after 42 years in existence. They had made two previous trips to the Super Bowl, both in New Orleans, but they had never seen the Big Easy in this light.

Nobody had.

It was an eye-opening spectacle — as much about military might outside as the football inside, and yet another jarring reminder of how much has changed since Sept. 11.

The pre-game and halftime shows were awash in patriotism and remembrance.

The emotional peak came at halftime, when rock band U2 sang its haunting hit, "Where the Streets Have No Name," while the names of the victims of the terrorist attacks were displayed.

But nothing could have topped the way the game ended.

"We shocked the world!" Patriots safety Lawyer Milloy said.

Ticketholders arrived up to five hours early to guarantee they wouldn't miss the start.

Reporter still gone, no leads

Associated Press

KARACHI, Pakistan — With leads into Islamic extremist groups running dry, Pakistani investigators said Sunday they were expanding their search for the kidnappers of Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl into Karachi's murky criminal underworld.

The investigation has been complicated because of several e-mails purportedly from the kidnappers which police now believe were hoaxes. Late Sunday, police searched an eastern Karachi neighborhood from which e-mails believed genuine may have been sent.

Investigators still consider Islamic extremists, especially Harkat ul-Mujahedeen, as the most likely suspects in the Jan. 23 abduction of Pearl, the newspaper's South Asian bureau chief.

Pearl, 38, was working on a story about Islamic fundamentalists and was trying to arrange an interview with the leader of a small militant group, Sheik Mubarak Ali Shah Gilani. Pearl disappeared Jan. 23 in Karachi after leaving for an appointment at a downtown restaurant

"So far no breakthrough has been made, but some progress has been made in investigations," Pakistani Interior Minister Moinuddin Haider said Sunday.

However, other investigators,

Sniper rifle found near Park City area

SALT LAKE CITY — Olympic security officials were investigating the discovery of a sniper rifle and ammunition reportedly found in the mountains near the Park City Olympic area.

The Utah Olympic Public Safety Command confirmed Saturday that the .50-caliber rifle was found, but said it was "important to note the rifle was not near an Olympic venue."

The Standard-Examiner of Ogden reported the rifle was discovered five miles from the Olympic cross-country skiing venue at Soldier Hollow. A hunter found the weapon last Saturday, it said.

Tracy Hite, a spokeswoman for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, would not disclose where the rifle was found. Utah Gov. Mike Leavitt said he was told the weapon had no link to the Winter Olympics.

The type of weapon found is often used by military and police as a sniper rifle because of its power. It can hit a target a mile away.

The Standard-Examiner cited a report from the Wasatch County Sheriff's office that said the rifle was found in a green metal box marked "explosives" along with 386 rounds of ammunition.

Mideast, Ireland report progress at forum

NEW YORK — The Middle East and Northern Ireland took center stage at the World Economic Forum on Sunday, as key players in two of the globe's most intractable conflicts expressed hope that they could work toward peace.

Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said he saw "a ray of hope" for Mideast peace on the fourth day of the forum, while key players in the peace effort for Northern Ireland said they were pleased with the disarmament process.

About 2,700 participants at the five-day economic forum — ranging from corporate leaders to celebrities — are discussing U.S. foreign policy, its possible role in breeding terrorism and the down side of globalization.

David Trimble, leader of Northern Ireland's power-sharing government, said he is glad to see that the disarming of militants is under way and that "one wants to see it continue."

Man fined for trespassing in Oly Village

SALT LAKE CITY — A man who jumped a security fence at the Olympic Village pleaded guilty to trespassing and was sentenced to 30 days in jail Friday.

Sheldon Iver Goodman was also ordered to pay $2,500 and serve two years' probation.

Secret Service agents caught him Jan. 27 inside the athletes' village on the Utah campus after he set off a motion sensor. He told police he was just taking a shortcut.

The 48-year-old Goodman acknowledged in court Friday that he knew access was restricted and that signs were posted on a fence around the area. He added, however, that there was no sign at the spot he entered the village.

Goodman has been arrested on trespassing charges several times in the past six years. His lawyer said most of them stemmed from Goodman's attempts to find a place to sleep at night, although prosecutors said he is not homeless.

Audio conference discusses food services

BYU will be one of 78 colleges and universities participating in an interactive audio conference on emergency preparedness and food safety Tuesday.

Kerry Baum, emergency preparedness coordinator at BYU, will be one of five featured speakers. Other speakers will discuss what should be done during and after a crisis, how dining services departments can develop an emergency plan and how to receive food deliveries during an emergency.

The list of speakers includes Carol Sherman of New York University and G. Scott Anderson of Borough of Manhattan Community College. They will describe how their staffs dealt with the crisis of Sept. 11.

The conference will be at 11 a.m. in 180 SASB.

speaking on condition of anonymity, said police still had no firm idea who was holding Pearl or where. Pakistani authorities hope for a breakthrough in the case before President Pervez Musharraf visits the United States next week.

"The various agencies of the United States government are actively trying to be helpful," Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said Sunday on ABC's "This Week." "The Pakistani government is being very cooperative and is doing what they can do."

Condoleezza Rice, President Bush's national security adviser, also expressed satisfaction with Pakistan's efforts to solve the case.

"We certainly hope that the kidnappers understand that they're doing, whatever cause they are promoting, no good here, and that Daniel Pearl needs to be released and released right away," she said on "Fox News Sunday."

Pakistani police, however, have been unable to find two primary suspects, Mohammed Hashim and Bashir Ahmad Shabbir. Hashim, also known as Arif, is believed to be a Harkat ul-Mujahedeen activists and Shabbir was a follower of Gilani, police said.

Gilani was arrested last week, but investigators say it is uncertain whether he played any role in the abduction.

In the capital Islamabad, a top-level government task force met Sunday to review the investigation. A source who took part in the meeting said the participants discussed the possibility that the kidnapping may have been carried out by one of Karachi's numerous criminal gangs.

The source spoke on condition of anonymity.

However, Mukhtar Ahmad Sheik, who is in charge of security here in Sindh province, confirmed that the investigation was not limited to religious extremists.

"We are keeping all options open in our investigations," he said. "The list of suspects ranges from religious extremists to gangs of criminals."

Jamil Yusuf, chief of the Citizen-Police Liaison Committee, was skeptical about a criminal link. The committee was formed in the last decade to help police combat crimes, especially kidnappings.

Pakistani and U.S. news media have received at least six e-mails purportedly from the kidnappers. However, police consider only two of them genuine. Those two included photos of the journalist.

Police said Sunday that a teenage boy in the eastern border city of Lahore admitted sending two of the bogus e-mails. Authorities gave no further details except that the youth, about 15 years old, was released without charge into the custody of his parents.

Investigators, speaking on condition of anonymity, said U.S. authorities, including the FBI, were trying to trace the two e-mails believed from the kidnappers.

Late Sunday, police surrounded an apartment complex in Karachi's eastern Gulistan-e-Jauhar neighborhood, from which they suspected the two genuine messages may have been sent.

The operation was still under way early today, and police said it would take hours to complete.

An e-mail sent to news organizations Friday claimed that Pearl had been killed and his body dumped in a Karachi cemetery. Police combed cemeteries Saturday, but found no trace of Pearl and regard the claim as a hoax.

"I feel strongly that distracted driving causes a lot of crashes in our state," Duncan said.

Kelly Mott, 21, a senior from Bountiful, Davis County, majoring in art history, said she considers herself a safe driver, but admits she is often distracted while driving.

"Sometimes I talk on my phone, but mostly I just talk to people in the car while I drive," Mott said.

Mott also said that she sometimes changes clothes while driving when she is running late.

"I definitely think you can drive and do something else while in the car," Mott said.

Mott said she is opposed to the penalty for the distracted driving bill.

"I can see the safety in it, but I would be really annoyed if I got that fine," she said.

Duncan said he favors the legislation and likes the way it is written.

"This bill addresses a laundry list of actions, so people understand these are the things we are looking for in distracted driving," Duncan said.

Holdaway said opponents of the bill think it is government intrusion, but he thinks the problem is serious enough to require legislation.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration conducted a study in 1997 that revealed 4,400 people died in that same year because of distracted driving.

Ordinance in Sandy similar to proposed state legislation

By Jonathan Wardle
wardle@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

While the Utah Legislature is discussing legislation aimed at distracted driving, including driving while using a cell phone, no hard evidence has been collected confirming that cell phones are a contributing factor in accidents and traffic violations.

"Our message is that you be more attentive," said Sgt. Doug McCleve of the Utah Highway Patrol. He also said using a cell phone can be a distraction to drivers.

McCleve said there is no statewide legislation restricting the use of cell phones while driving. However, the Utah Legislature is discussing a bill that could increase the severity of a traffic violation if the driver is driving distracted, McCleve said.

"Anything that would cause a driver to be distracted is a great concern," McCleve said. "It's a big responsibility to drive a car down the road."

Sandy has already enacted legislation similar to the proposed bill. The Sandy ordinance, like the proposed Utah bill, is targeted at any act that leads to inattentive driving, said Chris Hillman, Sandy public information officer.

Among the activities in the Sandy ordinance are eating, drinking, watching a video display, attending to hygiene and using a cell phone, Hillman said.

"People think it's a good idea," said Officer Curtis Robertson of the Sandy Police Department. "They seem fairly supportive of it as a secondary citation."

The Sandy ordinance was enacted after the city prosecutor noticed a distinctive pattern in traffic violation cases, Hillman said. No study was done to measure the effects of cell phones on driving, Hillman said.

According to the Web site for the Utah Senate, the proposed Utah bill also targets eating, drinking, watching a video display and using a cell phone while driving as possible distractions.

In New Jersey, however, when there was a movement to ban cell phone use among drivers, the decision was made to collect empirical data first.

Beetles have taken up residence in this wood door frame leading to the "Lure of the West" exhibit currently in the MOA.

Beetles attack art exhibit at MOA

By Barbara Edwards

Beetles have become the new uninvited tenants in an exhibit at the Museum of Art.

The museum found beetles living in wood used as scenery for the new Smithsonian art exhibit.

Unlike some insects, these are harmless to the collections inside the museum.

"They will not damage floors, they will not damage picture frames, they will not damage paper or canvas," said Campbell Gray, director of the Museum of Art.

Over the past few weeks several beetles have come out of the wood after forming into adults.

When the beetles were initially found, they were brought to Richard Baumann, curator of insects at the Bean Life Science Museum.

Baumann identified the insects as long horn beetles that are common to the Rocky Mountain area.

The logs used in the exhibit were to give the feeling of a Yellowstone lodge at the time the displayed paintings were created, Gray said.

He said the wood was bought by the museum from a log provider that is usually requested by customers building log homes.

Gray said it was quite well known that in log homes, these logs have had trouble with borers and beetles.

"We bought the logs knowing that this is an issue," Gray said, "and then we investigated ourselves the process of fumigation."

Even though the wood was fumigated before it came to campus, some things were overlooked.

Baumann said moving the insects into a warm atmosphere caused the beetles to think it was spring and to emerge.

However, Gray said most of the insects are still in larvae form and have not yet grown into adults.

"The only thing in this museum that will attract them is the logs themselves," he said.

Floral future uncertain

A former BYU floral student displays an example of what she learned from her involvement with the floral design class.

Norah Hunter, a freelance florist from Pleasant Grove, is concerned about the future of her floral design classes at BYU.

Hunter has worked as a professor at BYU for 19 years, but fears that as the College of Biology and Agriculture streamlines its curriculum, floral design may not fit into the plans.

Hunter said she hopes the class is retained because she feels it is a valuable asset to the university.

"It helps round out the university experience," Hunter said. "It's not just a craft class. It's an academic class that teaches a valuable skill. It's where art and science meet."

College leadership officials insist no final curriculum decisions have been made.

"We have no secret list of which classes will be kept and which classes won't," said John Bell, associate dean of the college.

Each department will submit a proposal outlining the curriculum that best meets the needs of students and the goals of the college, Bell said.

Bell said he has not yet received any of the proposals.

"We're probably at least a month away from making any proposals," said Von Jolly, chair of the Department of Agronomy and Horticulture.

Once department proposals are made, they must be approved by a college leadership council made up of deans and department chairs, and then receive final approval from the University Curriculum Council, Bell said.

Jolly said some of the classes would be cut from the new department curriculum. But since no final decisions have been made, Jolly said his classes are as much in jeopardy as Hunter's.

Hunter said she is working on gaining approval for her floral design classes to fulfill the arts and letters general education requirements.

"There are very few general education courses in the College of Biology and Agriculture," Hunter said.

The department has encouraged Hunter's general education efforts, Jolly said.

"I have students from every major," Hunter said. "Some actually change their major after just taking this class for fun. It helps not only with their vocation, but their avocation."

Sara Pratt, 22, a senior from Potomac, Md., is enrolled in the advanced floral design class.

Pratt, a landscape and urban horticulture major, said the floral design classes fulfill requirements toward her degree, but she would have taken the class even if it didn't.

"I'm a little nervous about leaving all the kids for so long, but they're learning how to do laundry and meals and they should get along fine," Hansen said.

Hansen said she is assigned to the Delta Center and her jobs range from seating audiences, taking tickets, managing outdoor crowds and working with the shuttles.

She said she is excited and anxious to come to Salt Lake City to see all the different people and to be a part of history.

Thousands of students, Utah residents and even some out-of-towners are jumping at the chance to volunteer.

People don't think of it as work, they think of it as an experience, said Clifford "Rip" Rippetoe, executive director of the Visitor Information Services coalition of Utah.

> "For many this will be a once in a life-time experience, that is why there is such a huge volunteering spirit."
> — Rip Rippetoe, executive director of Visitor Information Services

The Salt Lake Organizing Committee has had an overwhelming response from the community and all over, in call to arms, said Kirsten Bailey Goulet, the media and communications coordinator of SLOC.

"We're in a unique position where we had to actually stop taking applicants after receiving over 67,000," Bailey said.

The Visitor Information Services Coalition of Utah, which will be providing information and service for the travel and tourism during the Olympics, have about 780 volunteers, with four couples from Washington, Colorado, Nevada and Washington, D.C.

"For many this will be a once in a life-time experience, that is why there is such a huge volunteering spirit," Rippetoe said.

But for some people a vacation sounds more enticing than volunteering.

"I can't wait to get out of here," said Alisa Leonard, 20, a junior from Merced, Calif., majoring in English.

Leonard and her 2 roommates are headed to Paris and London for 11 days. They decided to go because they didn't want to be around all the hype of the Olympics, she said.

"It's cool if people want to volunteer, but I see it as a great opportunity to get out of Utah during our time off," she said.

Whether vacationing or volunteering, traveling far to get to Utah, or traveling as far away to get out of Utah the Winter Olympics will go on.

"It's been an adventure," said Rippetoe, "and we hope we can influence a lot of people."

The Cougars avoided the Cowboys' lasso Saturday afternoon when they walked all over the University of Wyoming, 85-70.

The Cowboys (14-5, 5-1) could not corral BYU (13-6, 3-3) in Provo. The floor in the Marriott Center and the reemergence of sophomore forward Mark Bigelow prevented any upset.

"The floor bounces all the time. If you are not used to it, it changes your shot and everything about the game. It is a different environment," Wyoming head coach Steve McClain said.

In fact, BYU extended the second-longest home winning streak in the nation to 31 games.

Bigelow dug deep into the saddle of the Cowboys as he drained a three-pointer with 8:08 remaining to extend the Cougars' largest lead of the game to 19 points.

"It was good to see Mark come out and get some confidence," Cougar head coach Steve Cleveland said.

Bigelow shot 66 percent from the floor and drained 50 percent from behind the arc. He finished with 19 points.

His offensive firepower helped snap a three-game losing skid against conference foes.

"We ran into a team that was coming off three loses and we knew they had their back against the wall. They came out and played wi purpose and confidence," McClain sa

Cougs beat Ohio St. for seventh straight w

The men's volleyball team extended its wining streak to seven with 3-0, 3-1 wins over Ohio State this weekend.

Saturday the Cougars had four players with double digit kills for the first time this season.

Senior outside hitter Joaquin Acosta led the team with 17 kills while senior opposite hitter Mike Wall went 17/32. Junior outside hitter Jaime Mayol had 10 kills and junior middle blocker Rafael Paal went 11/20.

Paal stepped up early in game one Saturday for the Cougars, recording three kills and giving BYU a 4-2 lead. The Cougars led most of the game and won 30-25 on a kill by Acosta.

The Cougars and Buckeyes traded the lead early in game two, but with the game tied at five, sophomore middle blocker Chris Gorny made two of his match-high eight blocks to give BYU a 7-5 lead. The Cougars were able to hold the Buckeyes off for a 30-25 win.

"We need to work on putting teams away when we are up," Wall said.

For game three, Ohio State made some line-up changes by bringing in freshman outside hitter Mike Wauligman.

McGown said by bringing in Wauligman, Ohio State allowed senior Pieter Olree to be free to attack the ball from the back row. That is exactly what happened as Olree exploded for seven kills in game three. Ohio State won game three 28-30.

Game four seemed to be a tug-of-war, as BYU would take a small lead, and then OSU would tie the game. With the score tied at 12, BYU took the lead on an OSU service error, and went on to a 21-14 lead.

The Buckeyes then pulled within three to 23-20, but that was as close as the game would get as BYU went on to win game four 30-26.

"There were some stretches where we were spectacular — flawless on offense and defense," McGown said.

The Cougars did not have too much trouble as they went up against Ohio State on Friday night.

Ohio State took control of game one early on. Olree led Ohio State to a commanding eight-point lead, 19-11.

BYU rallied and went on an 11-3 run to tie the score at 22, but were unable to take the lead until the score was 33-32 on an error by OSU. Sophomore middle blocker Chris Gorny ended the game with a block, putting the Cougs up 1-0.

"It was beyond belief we could come back. They were on fire," McGown said.

BYU and OSU came out trading kills early in game two, but the Cougs took the lead at 6-5 and did not trail again. BYU took an eight-point lead at 25-17 and went on to win 30-23.

The Cougars took charge early in game three, and even though Ohio State kept the match close never held the lead. BYU hit a match high of .545 attack percentage while OSU hit .310.

After going 7-1 in the Smith Fieldhouse the Cougars now go on the road for their next six matches. They play Long Beach State on Wednesday and Friday and UC Irvine on Saturday.

Cougars run over Rebels

By Rebekah Romney
romney@newsroom.byu.edu

The women's basketball team swept SDSU and UNLV this weekend, finishing off with a 72-61 win over the Rebels and moving up to 5-2 in the conference.

This win means a great deal to the Cougars, putting them alone in third place for the conference.

"We had to sweep this thing to have a chance," coach Jeff Judkins said.

The win did not come easily, as UNLV and BYU were neck and neck for the entire first half.

BYU came out sluggishly, trailing by one point at half time. The Cougars were only shooting 33 percent from the field and 25 percent from the arc in the first half.

UNLV's senior forward Linda Frolich entered the game to lead her team as the MWC's two-time player of the year, averaging 22.3 points per game with 10.9 rebounds.

Judkins split the defensive burden of guarding Frolich between senior forward Lisa Osguthorpe and junior forward Jennifer Leitner.

"She's one of the hardest players to guard," Osguthorpe said. "She can take you inside and out."

Frolich picked up 22 points and seven boards during the game.

The Cougars came out in the second half ready to play and found a turning point in the game with the score 60-59 in favor of the Rebels.

"If we make a play here, we'll win," Judkins told the team.

Junior guard Erin Thorn stepped up and made the play the Cougars needed, grabbing the rebound and drawing a foul.

Thorn had 26 points, six rebounds and five assists, but said that single rebound was her biggest play of the game.

"We did exactly what he said," Thorn said. "That's where the tide shifted."

BYU knew it had to interrupt UNLV's flow in order to stay in the game.

"When a team gets momentum, you have to stop them," Judkins said.

BYU made the big play needed to pull ahead, but the Rebels were not about to give up and go home. They started a comeback with great intensity.

"We get ahead and become lethargic," Judkins said. "We've got to keep playing."

With the Cougars on fire, UNLV's junior guard Constance Jinks desperately tried to bring her team back into the game.

Jinks had 17 points and six rebounds, but could not pull her team through, and had to surrender a loss to the Cougars.

BYU left the game shooting 44 percent from the field and 40 percent from the arc.

The Cougars face Wyoming and Colorado State on enemy territory this week.

The softball team started off its season with a successful weekend at the Southern Utah University Tournament, finishing with three wins and one loss.

On Friday the team beat Southern Utah 10-1.

Then on Saturday the Cougars played three games, defeating Oregon State 4-1 and St. Mary's 11-4, and losing 2-1 to the University in San Diego.

Head coach Mary Kay Amicone said she was happy with how the weekend turned out.

"I was really pleased with the way we played this weekend," she said. "Our pitchers did a really good job. That was an area we needed experience at."

The biggest win was over Oregon State, who was ranked 18 in the national poll. Senior second baseman Kari Pringle said it was a great feeling getting the win against Oregon State.

"Everything was just solid," she said. "The bench and everyone was into it. Everyone was pumping each other up."

Even with the good start Amicone isn't getting too excited. She said there will be times that they will play well and still lose.

"I'm happy coming out 3-1, but we understand part of our situation is the process," Amicone said. "We're not goin 10 or 11 runs a game b the offense where if w it's contagious."

Referring to the ga the University of S Amicone said "We jus a little flat that game."

In the process of running bases, California native Carson strained a hamstring and was taken out of the game.

Big hits were not the only reason for the big win. Head coach Vance Law said tough pitching played a crucial part as well.

"It was gutsy pitching performance by Jeff Mousser," he said. "He threw the ball well. That was a critical thing all night."

The right-handed sophomore relief pitcher was remarkable on the mound, pitching seven-plus innings and giving up only two hits out of 22 batters.

Without gutsy pitching, great hitting would have meant very little, Law said.

Following the 4 1/2 hour game Thursday, the Cougars took the field again the next evening at Anteater Ballpark.

Two Cougar sacrifices, one in the second and one in the fifth, sent two runners home, giving BYU a 2-1 lead.

Powerful hitting in the fifth sent five Anteaters home, shattering the Cougar advantage and giving the lead to UCI 6-2.

The Anteaters extended their lead in the sixth to 8-2.

The Cougars scored the game's final run in the seventh to close the UCI lead to 8-3.

The Cougar loss tied the series at 1-1.

In Saturday's game, UCI's Chris Miller belted a three-run homer in the fifth, giving the resurrected Anteaters their first home run in 10 years, and their first homer in the new Anteater Ballpark.

The Cougars struck back in the sixth inning when Jensen's sacrifice fly sent junior center fielder Doug Jackson home.

Obrey's two-out double off the center field wall scored Carson to close the Anteater lead to 4-2.

A late eighth inning hitting rally lifted the Anteater lead to 10-2, sealing game three, and taking over the series, 2-1.

"We're struggling on both parts of the game," Law said.

"We're kind of in a team slump. We're hoping somebody's going to step forward," he said.

Obrey is optimistic about the next away games against UC-Santa Barbara today at 2 p.m. PST and Cal Poly SLO on Tuesday at 3 p.m. PST.

"We need to come together, pick up everyone and keep the atmosphere positive," he said.

Junior outfielder Matt Carson slides safely back to first against New Mexico on April 14, 2001. The baseball team got its first win of the season Thursday, defeating UC Irvine 10-7 in 14 innings.

Protect Yourself! Investigate Before You Invest!

For your own protection closely examine any offers which promise or guarantee large amounts of income/ money.

Consider it a warning sign if you must buy something in order to start the program, or if you have to pay up front for the information. Please request information regarding the fee on every interview. Readers should beware of scams, especially when requiring payment up front.

Work at home ads usually require money up front to receive the books to contact the companies for work-at-home ideas. The Better Business Bureau said that the companies they have researched, for work at home, (stuffing envelopes, or making $1000 - $5000 /month), are not credible and you will usually lose money.

Be very careful NOT to give out any bank or Credit Card information unless you know the company well, or have checked them out thoroughly.

For a reliability report on a specific company, check first with your local Better Business Bureau. You will need the company's phone #.

At least twice a year, IHC hospitals hold disaster drills. Local agencies such as the fire department and paramedics are often involved, Cowley said.

Coy Porter, Provo deputy fire chief, said the fire department has also had terrorism and medical training for the Olympics. Porter said the departments have run several disaster drills over the last few years.

The Provo Fire Department has had practical exercises at the Seven Peaks Ice Arena, which included meeting with Grizzly hockey team officials to learn how to get people off the ice.

Porter said he feels the most important preparation the fire department has done is training their personnel and working with area agencies.

"None of us can pull this off without inter-local cooperation," he said.

Utah receives low gun grade

By Stacy Henrie
stacy@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Utah received a D- from the Brady Campaign for the state laws protecting children from guns, according to the organization's report released last week.

The Brady Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence, a non-partisan, nonprofit organization established to reduce gun violence, began evaluating and compiling information on state gun laws in 1997, said Nancy Hwa, associate director of communications.

The campaign started annual report cards in response to high-profile shootings by children, she said.

"The good news is firearm deaths are down for all age groups," Hwa said. "However, the rate of child deaths due to firearms is much higher here than in most industrial countries."

Although some states have improved their gun laws to protect children, too many have made little or no progress, Hwa said.

According to the report Utah continues to receive a low grade because it is among the worst states in the country at protecting its children against gun use.

One problem with guns in Utah is the gun show loophole bill, said Maura Carabello, from the Gun Violence Prevention Center.

Buyers at gun shows do not have to endure background checks if they purchase at a non-federal booth.

In addition, Carabello said, Utah does not have a child access prevention law.

Despite the state's poor performance in the Brady Campaign analysis, school rules have been set to protect Utah's children from guns.

Utah school districts may have gun problems, but they are infrequent, said Captain Robert Lavin of the Granite School District Police Department.

"I believe that all school districts have safe school policies in place, and in most cases they are strictly enforced for the safety of everyone," Lavin said.

is trapped in the valley ayer of warm air — the with all its pollutants, clear out until strong a storm moves into the ving the air to move and ion to disperse.

nt inversion through r and January has made ter's pollution levels y high, said Bob Dalley, ger at the State nt of Air Quality.

ed inversions cause the cold temperatures and brown haze over the city.

"Over prolonged inversion, pollution levels build day to day, so the inversion layer traps pollutants near ground level," Dalley said.

On the average there are 34 days of very strong inversion each year, but this winter there have already been 37 days of it, according to statistics from the State Department of Air Quality.

The inversion may persist, and chill and annoy Olympic visitors, because the valleys along the Wasatch front often have inversion during February, Dalley said.

"Some long-range forecasters are saying snow," Dalley said.

Cars account for about half of the county's air pollution problems, Alder said. While Geneva is no longer the leading industrial polluter for the valley since it has closed, about half of the pollutants still come from industry in the valley.

About 80 percent of the particulate matter, and nearly 90 percent of the carbon monoxide in the air along the Wasatch front come from cars, according to the Division of Air Quality's 2001 statistics.

Olympic traffic may actually worsen the air quality during February. While Angie Haskell, a representative of the Utah County Convention and Visitor's Bureau, doesn't think inversion will be a problem for Provo during the Games, pollution levels could be affected by more automobiles, she said.

"Air quality may worsen in that two weeks," Haskell said.

Lori Steadman, a part-time English professor, commutes from Salt Lake and said she has noticed how the pollution in the valleys affects her asthma.

"Recently I went to Colorado and when we came back, the pollution was bad — then I really noticed that it does affect me," Steadman said.

Wheezing and asthma attacks from pollution may not affect everyone in Utah County, but breathing air that the EPA calls unsafe hurts residents' health in a number of unrecognized ways. The pollutants in the air of the Wasatch Valley can aggravate bronchitis, emphysema and other respiratory and heart problems.

Bill to address family planning

By Ember Herrick

Emily and Forrest Chatwin, like several young married couples in Utah County, are taking life one month at a time.

Emily Chatwin, 24, an assembly worker in Provo, doesn't mind working to put her husband through the automotive engineering program at UVSC, but admits living on a single income is stressful and has affected their family planning.

"Ten years ago I thought that at 24 I would be married and have a child already," she said. "I thought I'd be a lot more stable, I thought we'd be in a house or at least be starting a family to where I wouldn't have to work full time and put my dreams of a child on hold."

Two bills drafted for the 2002 legislative session are designed to help couples like the Chatwins with family planning by changing health insurance company policies to include coverage of contraceptives.

Sen. Paula Julander, D-Salt Lake, is sponsoring SB54 — the Women's Health Care Parity Bill. The bill calls for prescription equity and would require insurance companies to participate in prescription contraceptive coverage if passed.

Julander said she is upset because the bill has been held up in the rules committee for four years and labeled a "contraceptive only" bill, despite the fact that prescription contraceptives are also widely used as treatment for medical ailments.

The bill has been described as a women's health and equity issue.

graphic by Denise Plant

According to Lisa Roskelley, 23, an intern for Julander, under the system, women pay more than men for health care.

"Why should women's health cost women 60 percent more out of their own pockets than men?" Roskelley said.

Several insurance companies do offer a plan to employers that covers contraceptives, along with other plans that do not.

The system leaves the decision up to the employer rather than the employees and offers no incentives for making contraceptives more available to women, Roskelley said.

Sheila Craghead, of the Student Health Center insurance department, said BYU health insurance does not cover birth control, but the student pharmacy does give students a discount on contraceptives.

According to a national study done by the Journal of Nurse Midwifery, only 15 percent of large-group health plans cover all five primary reversible contraceptive methods and less than 40 percent cover any contraceptive methods at all.

Ice rinks close to the public

Utah Valley ice-sport enthusiasts have limited access to skate time during the Olympics.

Most of Utah's existing rinks are being used by the Salt Lake Organizing Committee as sites for games or as official Olympic training venues.

As a result, rinks throughout the valley are closed to both private and general public skaters.

"There is nowhere to go. Almost all the facilities in the state are booked for the Olympics," said Max Rabner, CEO and president of the Peaks Ice Arena.

The BYU IceCats hockey team, which usually practices at the Peaks Ice Arena, felt the crunch of rink closures when it was forced to shorten its season.

Brooks Dame, treasurer for IceCat organization, said the team cut some games and played more games earlier in the season to make up for lost time during the Olympics.

The IceCats wasn't the only team that suffered changes in its season.

The Peaks Ice Arena usually houses an indoor soccer league, but this season the soccer teams were moved to an area in South Provo.

Rabner said the teams scheduled their travel games during the Olympics.

The Cottonwood Heights Recreation Center, a rink open during the Olympics, is seeing an influx, director Mike Peterson said.

"Inside the valley, we will bring in the diehards who will find our hours so they can skate," Peterson said.

Ticket line becomes stampe

Associated Press

PROVO — Two women were treated by paramedics after being crushed by 500 eager music fans waiting for free Winter Olympics Medals Plaza tickets outside a Hallmark store.

The incident happened around 6 a. m. Saturday at the Provo Towne Center Mall, where the Hallmark Gold Crown Store was giving away hundreds of tickets.

Would-be concertgoers had been lined up since 8 p.m. Friday, said Christie Campbell, assistant manger at Hallmark. She characterized the scene as "mayhem."

"At 6 o'clock we opened up the mall doors and people were rushing in and they were up and pushing against the gate and people were smashed — and some girl passed out because she couldn't breathe," Campbell said.

Police were called to control the crowd and paramedics treated two victims at the scene, said Provo Police Sgt. J.D. Lougee.

The surging crowd was so forceful, the mall doors were broken. Damage was estimated at $1,000 to $2,000, said Celeste Neil, assistant manager of the Towne Center Mall.

Nate Crain, 27, of Alpine said he arrived at 9 p.m. Friday and was No. 24 in line.

"At the end of a very long and cold night, the last to arrive got a ticket while people who slept overnight got absolutely nothing, except an extremely bitter taste in our mouths," Crain said.

A "handful" of disorderly individuals were escorted from the building and did not receive tickets, Lougee said. No arrests were made.

About 20 officers were required to control the crowd, Lougee said.

Police went to the mall a second time at about 9:30 a.m. when people returned to receive their tickets.

Neil said the mall would re-evaluate its security procedure following the incident.

While Provo's experience was the worst, several of the 15 Hallmark outlets conten rambunctious crowds ar pointed people, becau were not enough ticke around.
